Even in flyfishing we sometimes have the syndrome of "Keeping up with the Jones". We want the best gear money can buy and alot of it is because of what we hear. People should explain more as to why they feel the Access is superior to the Clearwater II. If you believe that it is the rod that does all the fish catching then your wrong. It is a combination of both rod and the person. Knowing your equipment and how it handles/performs and what it is capable of, and knowing how to fish, will make all the difference in the world in landing that trophy of a fish. You can take the most expensive rod in the world and put it in someones hands, and unless they know how to use it, it is worthless.
