I'll have to say, in my brief 15 years of fishing Penns, as some dams come down and as the Penns Valley conservancy works to shore-up upper Penns' soft banks and plant more cover trees, as fewer cows loll in the stream and as regulations further restrict kill fishing, I've seen conditions get better. It's been better and worse, but it can appear to be absolutely PAVED with wild trout when they're on the feed. Abuses of the past weren't limited to coal mine runoff. Too often, that great olde-tyme fishing was the result of stocking big fish in marquee locations. I don't know if this happened at Penns, but it happened and still does some places.
