Agree with FI, nets are an essential part of your gear if you're into taking photos.

When i was younger, i felt a net was just extra weight. That was until one day fishing tricos on Big Spring when a 22" brown took my fly and proceeded to dive into a cress bed paralleling the stream channel. After several minutes of trying to evaluate my options on a 7X tippet, my buddy shows up and hands me his net. I must have given him a stupid look so he took the net and placed it over the opening into the cress bed created by the fleeing brown. Now on to the plan, I stuck my foot straight down into the bed causing one very hot brown to slam into the net.

Don't go anywhere without one since that day. Currently carrying a Brodin ghost cutthroat. Also have the longer handed float tube model. Highly recommended.
