

Subject: : Gear Talk

Topic: : Advice on Broken Rod

Re: Advice on Broken Rod

Author: : krayfish

Date: : 2013/3/17 18:08:31

URL:

Call sage, get repair dept on phone. Tell them your model. They may ask for serial # which is located on the blank just above the grip. I'm trying to remember what I was charged for my last repair ($60 maybe?). You will have to box up the broken rod and send it to them with the repair form off the sage website and your check for repairs. You will pay to ship the rod to them + $25 for them to ship it back + rod repair fee. You will also want to be aware that it may take anywhere from 6 weeks to 12 weeks to get the rod back into your hands. Overnighting the rod may speed things up by a week or so but its also quite expensive.

If they don't have the exact section you broke, they will make one or fit a section from a similar model. I got a 3 weight back in 83-84. I broke it 4-5 times. The last time it was repaired, they replaced the tip with one from their light line series. It looks funny because the butt section is severely bleached from th sun and the tip is 5 shades darker. Still works fine.