I agree that it seems to relate to the distance between your nymphs.

For steelhead I keep 18" between my two flies and have few if any foul hooks. For Trout I am often at 12" between flies and get an occasional foul hook but they are usually outside the mouth or near the pectoral fin when they do occur which is not so often that I would consider it a problem.

I am going to try tying with a tag end to my dropper fly this year and I'll see if that makes any difference in foul hooks.

I am curious if anyone else rigs this way and their experience.
