The main problem I've had with two flies is they often end up in two different current lanes the flies pull against each other, causing unnatural drag.

Try rubbing a small amount of bright colored strike putty on the tippet knot. You can spot the SP on the water and usually follow it back to the fly. Even if you can't see the fly, you can watch the SP.

Often, when fishing midges, there are a lot of bugs and fish rising in a small area and you end up setting the hook when the fish are actually taking a natural. With the SP on your tippet, you set only when you see the it move.

A small speck of SP really doesn't seem spook the fish, in fact the fish often strike the putty rather than my fly. 😊
