Somethings not right. Waders generally dont come with a warranty unless you sink serious money into them. Theres just too many variables of how they can begin leaking that have nothing to do with defects. Retailers begin losing money on them because they return them at store level as defective, and the manufacturer wont issue the retailer credit on them because they are dry rotted, torn by barbed wire, soles burnt from being held by the fire to warm up, the list goes on and on really. I'm not quite sure of the issue? They hurt your feet? You've had them for over 3 months?
