This might sound very unorthodox but sometimes when the lighting is really poor I just put one of those chartreuse, or fluorescent red Palsa stick-on indicators about 18" back on the tippet. It is so light that casting is only affected a bit in that you have to slow the casting motion a little bit but when fish are gorging on Tricos I don't even look where the fly might be - I just keep my eye on the little Palsa tab and when it jerks, or goes under, I know I have a fish on the Trico of midge.
