In my experience with midge fishing , if you can catch the "impact" where the fly hits the water it's fairly easy to follow , so i usually bang the fly down on the forward "impact" cast and follow if i can. If you do lose sight a little extra hard mend , causing the fly to move a little will put it back in view. I'm mainly dry flies when it come to midges.....spotting a midging trout is fairly easy with a little practice , but catching them can be very difficult. But man it's so much FUN!!!!
