When I put them on and apply the super glue I put it on the whole part of it that's on the fly line ( fills the little voids maybe? )

That probably does keep the water out, but then that's just too much messing around for me. I don't see what's to be gained by purchasing a special braided loop then fussing with it to get it to do what I want. Especially, since I can nail knot on some mono or better yet, whip a loop. Both in no time flat and with virtually no special materials needed.
