Well, time flies. Chauncey Lively actually passed away in 2000. In the PA Angler number of January/February 2001, his daughters wrote a tribute to their father. It begins: "We grew up on the streams of central Pennsylvania and on the ponds and rivers nearer our home in Pittsburg." Later in the article, they mention that their home was actually in a place called "Green Tree," near Pittsburg. They regularly fished the Loyalhanna and Fisherman's Paradise. The family also had a camp near Franklin, so they also fished in that locale. He and his wife retired to a place on the Ausable River in Michigan. he wrote his first fly tying article for the Angler in the November 1968 issue and his last in the May/June 2000 issue.
