Do beadhead nymphs typically work when fishing for wild trout?

I have occasionally fished a wild brown stream in North Carolina with a buddy of mine who is a guide there. He always told me that at this particular stream, the trout will never hit beadheads.

Since I moved to PA, I've been trying to keep the majority of my fishing on wild Brown/Brooke streams (Valley Creek, Saucon and Devils Hole have been the only places I've gone). I've tried using beadheads several times, but have yet to have any luck.

Am I doing something wrong, or is it common knowledge that you shouldn't use beadheads when fishing for wild trout?
