You know, since some of you have sort of left the topic, here's something I think I'm going to try this year: Tenkara fly-fishing. EXCEPT: I think I'm going to tie a section of old, worn-out fly line to an ancient cane pole I have in the garage, add a leader, and knot on a couple of nymphs. I guess that would be old man's Tenkara fly-fishing. If I really get to it, I do not imagine I'll do it very often, but I do think it might be a hoot. As for Czech nymphing and pinning, I think it's up to the individual. Heck, I easily recall when indicators were considered unsporting and beadhead nymphs were referred to as mini jigs!
