I had two friends come with me. They both are not fathers. One helped my oldest, while I worked with my youngest. The other brought his two younger cousins and helped them. I do not believe it was for only fathers and such. I can not speak for everybody, but I "kinda fished" but my sons were right next to us and reeled in the fish. My 3yr old did walk away a few times, but not farther then 10 feet and was instantly rejuvenated and interested when the fish was hooked. My 5yr old never left my buddies side. He had hand over hand help for casting and setting the hook. However, he set the hook many times by himself. I do not feel it is right for the kids to be taught to throw back dead fish, and we would have never done that. It is unfortunate if it did happen. I was really happy with mentor day and feel it was really worthwhile. Both of my children are asking when they can go next.
