Now you can explore many more streams than you could "in the good old days." It's the same, just different.

Not at all. You can merely increase your chances of hitting the good ones and avoiding the duds.

I don't know of anyone who "just drove around". Christ, from my dad and grandpa, I have stacks and stacks of the old paper USGS topo maps, and they're all marked up. They were map geeks too in those days. It's just that now you can pull up those maps, or even better ones, for anywhere in the state on the computer/smartphone, and overlay which streams are class A, have natural repro, get stocked, etc. You still gotta go try em out, and you still get gems and duds. But perhaps you can do your research a little quicker, and still be a little more likely to find the gems rather than the duds.
