In my local streams in perry county they are acually looking better than the last two years. I talked with a person a few days ago and he said that the water looked high, I had to laugh to myself that they aren't high they are normal he just didn't realize what normal looks like. In other places around the state there are issues.

Went to pine creek last spring, it was a little low when we arrived, within two days after a drenching rain it was blown out for a couple of days. Seemed to be one or the other for every trip I went on last year, ending the year in erie steelheading and it was no different.
