Well, I think in many stocking situations, guys do carry buckets a short distance. A hole or two up or down. Not sure "sweeping" could be any more effective than that.

I also get a little angry sometimes that the drivers often want to stock more fish in fewer places. Many of the harder places to get to get skipped unless someone demands that they go there. But I highly doubt this is any sort of management decision. And more a case where the driver has to put X number of fish in a stretch, it's a job to him, and he's in a rush, so it's quicker and easier to put a few extra buckets in this spot and skip that next spot.
