Does not the person walking past have the right to decide whether he/she wants to acknowledge your divine presence? It is only a curtesy. If someone walks by and smiles as they go by, does this mean they are friendly? You should not take things personal as you seem to have.

As far as opening day etiquetties, there usually are not very many. I had 2 spin casting gents turn me on to a hot fishing hole yesterday. I was a bit hesitant but joined them and it was worth it. I was almost skunked up till then. Ended up with 3 browns and 1 rainbow with my 3wt. Normally I would have walked by and fished elsewhere. They could have been rude, but chose not to.

So the question is: how far do you feel someone should be from you before they start fishing (on opening day)?
