All I can say is it's very situational. Every stream is different and hatches come off at different time, depending on many factor, but mostly water temperature and Barometric pressure. Like after a cold front the fishing may be dead for a day or even two. But as the front is coming through action can be fast and furious. Many folks like sunny days I myself prefer Partly cloudy days after a high pressure system has been over us for a couple of days. Time of year is important as to how long or short the days are also.
