I started out fishing a royal coachman dry but quickly switched to a bugger and several different nymphs. Nada. I knew conditions weren't ideal so it would be tough, but I thought we would at least eek a few out. After approaching with stealth, I even made sure to drift the nymphs and streamers deep into log jams, under rocks, and undercuts.

From my experience wild trout, or any wild fish or game for that matter, can be enigmatic. Some days you're just left scratching your head, but ultimately those are the days that keep me motivated and make me appreciate the good days.
