I would do a search on here for waders the topic comes up often. LL Bean, Orvis tend to have well-regarded waders and offer models at decent price points, and there are reviews on their own sites for their products.

If you ask about a specific model of one of those you may get someone on here who has them to respond. The ones you're looking at I doubt anyone on here uses.

Simms is highly regarded but expensive.

I think you should save up for better waders and wading boots, and in the mean time keep patching what you have and or fish from the bank. I haven't bought waders in ages so I have nothing to suggest (still using Red Ball Flyweights, no longer on market).

What school are you attending?
