We were also there on Good Friday. My ex-girlfriend and I had similar results. We started fishing around 10:30 upstream from the paradise. We nymphed for a couple hours with no results. We then began to see the rises and fished BWO's the rest of the day. I also missed a lot of fish, but brought seven to hand. My ex girlfriend kicked my butt this day. She caught 13. I don't think she missed any fish. It was a good day.

The day didn't start too good though. We were driving down the road (422 Berks County) and I noticed something coming from the passing lane into my lane. I thought it could be a box or something so I just ran it over. I couldn't really slow down or get into the other lane because there was traffic everywhere so I just ran it over. It stayed under my vehicle and I knew it was something solid. I couldn't pull over right away because there wasn't much of a shoulder. I finally was able to pull over and I found out what the culprit was.

It was a metal gas can that must have fell from some a-holes truck that forgot to strap it down. My ex said that she saw sparks coming out the back of the truck. The gas can was smoking, but I don't know if it was full or not. We got out of there in case it would blow up. Part of my bumper was off, but I was able to snap that back. The bumper is cracked. My check engine light came on, but it went back off on the drive home from Spring Creek. I called my insurance and put in a claim. They said my insurance could go up if the damage is over $1000. I find that to be ridiculous since it wasn't my fault. I'm just concerned about what could have been damaged underneath my truck. The bumper has a crack and i'm afriad that could just get worse. I guess the smart thing to do is to get it checked out.
