Freestoners I usually start w/ the usual suspects. Might use a stimy, EHC, or wulff on top w/ a PT or HE dropped. That's kind of a "searching" set-up for me on new waters until I'm on the stream long enough to pick up on anything else that might be going on. If I'm on a limestoner that I never fished before, I might go for a scud pattern or something typical of spring creeks. If the water is high, I'll go for buggers, sculpins, something like that. Usually the dry-dropper works for me, though. Presentation is the most important aspect, and for new waters, cover as much water as possible.
