Hmmm, In the first case if someone looks and seems to acknowledge your presence then I would nod and maybe wave as to no intrude on them. In the second case if someone does not invite you to fish I would go a hole or two up or down stream depending on the body of water. I did that more than a few times even though some bank hoppers jumped in front of me on opening day. IMO a fisherman should have an opportunity fish a good hole by themselves if they get there first. On big rivers where you have more space and more potential holding areas common sense and casting distances should be your guide. I often ask the other fisherman if it is OK to work up the other side or if I should haul out and go around them.
