Ahh, but stonefly don't often get swooped away...they choose to let go to find greener pastures. When they reach slower water is when the swim/sink to the bottom.

Mayflies too.

And while Ed's video is great, filming from an aquarium is different than a swiftly moving stream. And mayflies ready to hatch are different than ones who are causually drifting downstream. However, I will agree that mayflies wiggle a lot more than stoneflies while drifting.
