I know it sounds weird but any animals main instinct is to reproduce. They are set up to be able to respond to their spawning colors. People tie Brookies fin flies. This is also based on personal experience. I tied a yellow nymph for testing my hypothesis. Sure enough my buddy and I were fishing a stream and cam upon a golden. We tried everything and I remembered the yellow nymph. 1st drift boom! Got him.

Back in my bait fishing days I would use cheese eggs for golden rainbow and pink for rainbows I was targeting. Also the ultimate "bait" for rainbows and golden's are a salmon egg with a waxworm. Tie an egg with some white dangling behind it.

Give me the GPS coridinants ;)
