There is plenty of open water for miles and all of it is good. From just south and west of Tyrone, all the way down and past Alexandria, there is great fishing.

Caddis, BWO and early blues and their nymphal second choice flies would be good things to have stocked along with streamers and junk flies for backup.

I have seen some rather large crays, mostly into the summer months, but I guess that have to be there all year, just not as active, I would think.

When I go to the Little J, I look always for surface activity. If there is none, which is rare, then nymphing the riffles is a good strategy. Streamers and nymphing: same damn thing if you ask me.
