

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : Italian Brown Trout

Re: Italian Brown Trout

Author: : troutbert

Date: : 2013/4/11 9:01:10

URL:

Quote:

Fishidiot wrote:

Never having fished in Italy, I certainly can't speak from experience. Very broadly speaking, however, if you look at pics of European trout, esp those in the Mediterranean or south Asian areas, they do tend to look strange to our American eyes. I have seen some articles depicting Italian trout and they do seem to have especially bright red spots, and more and bigger ones, than we're used to seeing.

Agreed. I found some photos online of Italian brown trout that also had very large red spots. The spots were not as screaming red as in the photo shown on this thread, which I think just had the color saturation pumped up more, so that red looks more scarlet than would be actual case on the fish. But those very large red spots on Italian trout apparently are for real.

You'll see quite a lot of variation in brown here in the US, but apparently there is even more in the "old country." Probably many of the varieties never got imported here. I'd love to catch some of those Italian brown trout.