I'm not convinced that they're photoshopped. I've caught wild browns with red spots just as bright as those, however they weren't as large or as numerous. If they had as many as those fish they'd look very similar. I've also caught wild browns with pale red spots.

If they bumped up the saturation or used a filter it would also show in the hands that are holding the trout. That is unless they went out of their way to edit the pics. Just because it's something you have never seen before isn't a reason to jump to conclusions. I have caught natives that were unbelievably colored and others that were as dull as a rock.
