
Subject: : Fly Fishing Locations

Topic: : Pine/Kettle creek magic?

Re: Pine/Kettle creek magic?

Author: : The_Sasquatch

Date: : 2013/4/12 12:20:18

URL:

Honestly dude, a huge part of it for me is nostalgia. I cut my teeth fly fishing up there. I've been going up to Potter as long as I can remember. That area has been a part of my life as long as I've been alive. I consider it to be my home away from home in many ways, and not to sound hoaky, but the spirit of my grandparents is alive there like no where else. I can't be in my cabin for more than 15 minutes w/out being flooded with memories of my grandfather (my grandparents lived with when I was growing up, we were very close. My grandfather built our cabin w/ my great uncles, and a lot of their belongings were moved up to the cabin after they died). The streams are just as much a part of my memory of them as the relics in my camp. I fished Pine and Lyman Run and Lyman lake with my grandpa as a kid. When I learned to fly fish, it was on Kettle with my dad and brother. Some of my best memories, my most favorite times with my dad and brother were on Pine and Kettle. I don't know man, the whole area is just one big part of my childhood.