Swattie, thinking you were about a half hour south of me. As I was in town in the morning for work, I gave it a thought before deciding to head north. And a Squatch was perhaps a half hour W/SW of you!

K-Bob, I released em. They are still movin on up, though.

I really noticed a difference in the water/rocks below and above the split. I mean, I always noticed it, but it was prominent, in your face obvious, yesterday. Below the splits (where the browns dominate now), rocks are dark gray, and there's lots of streambottom moss/algae right now, and bugs everywhere. Above the splits (still 95+% brookies), the rocks have a very orangish tinge, there's no algae, no bugs, and the water was absolutely crystal clear. We're only talking a difference of no more than a half mile here. I think in that area where it splits up, a lot of the flow has to be underground or something.
