I fished with my alter ego, Tom C / Afishn from Chester County, on the Monday after opening weekend. We hit a few places and ended fishing French Creek on the way home. I noticed there were "Posted" and "No Parking" signs along the road where everyone used to park and fish in years past. I shook my head and thought to myself, "what's the big deal about letting folks pull off a dirt road to park and fish." Anyway, we found a legal place to park and walked to the stream.

At one of the more popular fishing holes, I looked around on the bank and saw styrofoam bait containers, bags of corn, Pabst Blue Ribbon cans (both in the water and on the bank), lure boxes and of course, the ubiquitous red white and blue Eagle Claw hook packages. There were quite a few anglers there stepping over and around all the junk to fish.

Tom and I fished for a while, and before we left we got some plastic bags from the truck and hauled all the trash out of there. IMO, all the anglers that let that junk sit there all weekend (on someones property that allowed fishing yet!) are no better than the slobs that threw the stuff there. How could you blame anyone for posting their property, and don't blame the FBC for lost access to streams. Really sad.
