

---

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : First good numbers day of the year

Re: First good numbers day of the year

Author: : pcray1231

Date: : 2013/4/15 8:02:09

URL:

Yeah, on that one, there are a few brookies downstream of the transition, and a few browns above. Both species are throughout. So tigers are a possibility.

The abruptness is in the rock type/color, and bugs/fertility. It used to be that brookies dominated for a ways even below that transition. That no longer appears to be the case, the brown/brookie transition coincides with the physical change.

Regarding the changes in acid rain, see the following. I know it's somewhat old, the latest data included is 2006. However, they are highlighting a (good) trend starting in the 70's and 80's. And the causal factors that created this trend have certainly not declined since 2006. If anything, they've accelerated, thanks to completely shuttering a few coal plants as natural gas becomes the clearly favored fuel for power generation.

[http://www.dep.state.pa.us/dep/deputa ... caaa/2006report\_caaa.pdf](http://www.dep.state.pa.us/dep/deputa ... caaa/2006report_caaa.pdf)