I'm a glutton for punishment and went out on Saturday morning. It's been tradition with my friends and I for years. Same guys, same spot, same beer. This year was a little different though. Showed up at the usual spot at 5:30am and it was barricaded off where we always park. The landowner was there guarding his property because someone tore up his field last year on opening day. We bs'd with him for a few minutes and he told us we were good to park on his land. Get down to the stream a few hundred yards away from my truck and there's nobody in sight of us. Standing there having a few celebratory "our wife's let us out for a whole day" beers, and then it happens. One lone fisherman coming our way. There are four of us with our gear spread out every 40 feet or so and this guy decides to step over our gear and get in right in the middle of us. Not another fisherman within a quarter mile in either direction and he picks our spot. We expressed our displeasure with his choice a few different ways, but he didn't care. He tells us he's fished here for years and he's not going anywhere. At 8am, one of my buddies was literally rubbing elbows with him but he held his ground. We moved on and figured it wasn't worth the fight.
