

Subject: : Fly Fishing Locations

Topic: : Penns Creek?

Re: Penns Creek?

Author: : pcray1231

Date: : 2013/4/18 7:40:32

URL:

Spring Creek and Big Fishing Creek both seem to handle rain better than Penns (don't get as brown, and drop and clear much more quickly). Also, Elk Creek is a trib of Penns that can fish very well and will hold water color better. It's not too far to Tea/Kish drainage either and most of those streams handle rain better than Penns as well (just about everything handles rain better than Penns).

And there are a number of smallish waters that fish well. Cherry Run is only one of them.

Also, with the normal thunderstorm situation, storms are often either isolated, or if in a line, much more severe in one place than the next. It's not all about which streams handle rain the best, but which streams GOT the rain. One place can get over an inch of rain while somewhere a half hour away got less than a quarter inch. Watch the radar as the offending storms go by, look for places they missed or hit more lightly. And keep up on stream gauges.