I started out using furled leaders, and similar to the poster above the novelty wears out and you eventually go back to standard leaders.

However from time to time I think about using them, especially those that now have a tippet ring attached making it real nice for fishing a rig of a couple of flies and a dropper and making tippet changes easy. Also the furled leader provides a bit more "grip" for putting on indicators for nymph fishing, such those you can get that are nothing more than fly line with their core removed.

I don't know that there is any disadvantage in using furled leaders versus standard.
