I can't think of anything they could possibly do to fine tune the action of a blank once it is rolled and baked other than selectively sand areas of the blank.

Exactly

Done by one of the top designers to eliminate dead spots and create a more efficient rod

Someone mentioned mesier

Which is the same as what we are talking about with TFO

(Asian blank with a USA assemble)

Expect the TFO blueprinting and the work is done by someone with 3 times the amount of experience
