

Subject: : Fly Tying

Topic: : Grannom Larvae

Re: Grannom Larvae

Author: : CLSports

Date: : 2013/4/23 12:08:34

URL:

Good point on barbless hooks WBranch, but I might want to add to your argument that using barbless hooks will allow you to not even handle the fish at all. My fish usually fall off at my feet or are released at a long distance when I give them some slack line. No handling at all. No loss of their protective slime coat which is more of an issue than a small hole in their mouth. If you want to release a fish quickly, barbless is the way to go.

I only take pics of fish over 18", so naturally I don't take very many . . .

I like the flies.