This sounds like a style vs. substance argument. As long as the caster is applying proper mechanics he or she can utilize whatever style determined best/appropriate for the conditions. The only style I may point out as one the caster may want to consider for change is a style which limits one's potential to achieve a certain goal.

BTW, the belief that wind doesn't blow as strongly down near the water's surface has been proven to be less than accurate. There are other ways to effectively deal with wind.
