i have no problem fishing for stockies. i'd rather fish for wild fish and i know i'm getting a dumbed down version but that's okay too.

i wouldn't eat one though, because you don't know what steriods, hormones or antibiotics they feed them.

What i do know is that they do feed them on processed menhaden or sandeels partly, which is decimating the striper and tuna foodbase, and bringing cormorants inshore who are in turn decimating inshore waters and trout ponds, so i wouldn't eat em on principle.

i've always found that in cold water (below 50 say) a fat stocker can give a good account of itself.

and i put em back so the noobs/kids can catch them.
