You will start to learn the limits of your equipment the more often you get into that situation. You can put a lot of pressure on 6x if it's done right. Changing direction on the fish, moving after him and getting the line on the reel will all help. There's no magic bullet. You need to get back out there and hook another couple of big boys. You'll notice you improve in technique after every one you hook. I'm pretty sure I've taken fish over 5 pounds on 6x without fighting them to death. I don't think I've gone below 5x in a couple of years. No need to except when trico / midge fishing.

That is a rather stout lightning trout!
