Experimenting at the vise is fun and a good thing. If you ask me if the trout give it the nod it's a beautiful fly. If people don't like it but the trout do, the opinion that matters most is in. I have a fly just like that, when I show it to somebody they look at it and go hmmm then look away. Which I find hilarious cause the trout love it, year round, on all types of streams. Something to think about to help answer your question, how many different kinds of streams have you fished it, what kind of trout stockies, wild, natives? It really doesn't matter if it works on one and not others you've still got a good working fly, but on the other hand if it works on all types you've got a great working pattern. Have fun finding out. And please if you like let us know how it goes.
