The basics are there. I think they'll work well. If they don't, try trimming the longer tail fibers down to about half of the length. But try them the way they are first. The fish might want a bug that looks as if it has a trailing shuck.

That one in the middle looks like a Copper John soft hackle. A new invention, at least new to me. I wish I had some of those. My bet is that wild fish would like them just fine.

Almost all wet flies and nymphs look ugly after they've been in the water for a while. The ones that don't are usually lousy at catching fish.
