spray in the face and they are temporarily blinded and need a medical eye wash. after the wash their sight returns in about 30 minutes.

the small cans have a range of about 10-12 feet.

cheaper than pepper spray.

We had a problem this week with a bear at our camp. He's a lost soul with mange on his face and body. And his eyes are a little glazed over. But he wanted into the cabin in the worst way. Sitting on the porch, hanging on the front door. Several times he hung on the door and his eyes were about 8" from mine, while I yelled at him. Weird experience. It got to the point where I had to discharge a gun into the ground to scare him off, but 30 minutes later he came back. I actually had to barricade the front door with the picnic table on the front porch.

I called the game commission and they sent an officer out to look at the property after we left. He called me and his suggestion was to spray him with wasp spray. There were 6 different bears at our cabin on Tuesday, and 3 of them had mange. I'm going to buy ammonia and pour it around the porch to discourage them. Or do the balloon trick with ammonia solution.
