Here's a good article on introducing kids to fishing.

The common situation is that parents try to force kids to fish, the kids struggle with the gear, and aren't catching anything, so aren't enjoying it. And it all ends up in tears, frustration, anger, resentment. This is a VERY common situation, and it's heartbreaking to see it happening.

If you are aware of the potential for this problem to occur, hopefully you can avoid it. The most important thing is that the kids are enjoying themselves in the outdoors. For many young kids, throwing rocks in the water is more fun than any kind of fishing. And throwing rocks in the water is a great activity. Find a place where it won't bother anyone, and let them throw rocks to their heart's content.

And other kinds of just wandering around, exploring things, playing around in the outdoors, is often more interesting than a more controlled activity like fishing for young kids.
