

Subject: : Gear Talk

Topic: : Graphite Rod differences

Re: Graphite Rod differences

Author: : PennKev

Date: : 2013/4/29 12:16:08

URL:

Quote:

PatrickC wrote:

[quote]

What I don't like BTW, it when a company talks about how they have the hardest resin in the world like that matters over a single layer of graphite. If you are so careful with your rods that it never touches anything but the air you cast through...it's fine. One scratch from a tree branch walking into that remote water....not so fine. Or God forbid you are just tired and not casting well one day and your poor casting stroke leads to a BH woolly bugger hitting the rod. I could be more careful and protect that rod like it's my child. But come on, I want to be able to set the thing down once in a while. I want to be able to move through a section of dense brush without completely taking my rod down and putting it in a case.

They really aren't as fragile as your post would make them seem.