This was a slow, frogwater, gin clear stretch of a stocked stream that gets hammered on the regular and the fish have wised up pretty quick. Drag wasn't a problem at all. Not enough current to get bellies in your line, etc. As long as you cast with your fly out ahead and just downstream of the leader, you were getting a dead even drift. I definitely think they were line shy. At the end of the day, I figured out what works and had some fun and thats all that mattered :)
