Large (Dead) Brookies

This weekend I was fishing a local stream, which is also a Jam favorite. When I was walking back to my truck a man asked if I wanted a ride. Being that the truck was a few miles away I hopped in the back of his truck.

I noticed he was successful that day with a few wild brookies over 12".

While I'm sad to have witnessed the dead fish; knowing they will never be caught again, I am pleased to know larger fish exist in streams that get fish heavily.

I'm also sure this stream sees a lot of pressure this time of year and the harvesting of these large wild fish a yearly occurrence.

I will say I went to this stream because the other local streams were a bit high and I figured the water level there would be perfect (which it was). The downside is I didn't catch many fish, but I believe I was following in the path of several others that day.

Thoughts on the brookies?
