

Subject: : Paflyfish General Forum

Topic: : Who do you think is in the wrong?

Re: Who do you think is in the wrong?

Author: : wsender

Date: : 2013/4/29 19:11:50

URL:

Quote:

JackM wrote:

Hmmmm, not worth fighting under the circumstances, but seems the license purchased as a resident should be good until it says it isn't. Don't have time to research the law, but if what is posted is all there is, I think there is a reasonable defense available. Not ignorance of the law-- rather, a poorly drafted law and the principle that penal laws must be strictly construed.

Solution:

"A duly licensed angler who changes his residence during the licensing year must purchase a non-resident license to fish after the change of residence is effective, but shall be entitled to credit toward the cost of his or her non-resident license for all money paid to acquire the resident license for the same year...."

Out of curiosity Jack, how is it any different then a drivers license?

If you move out of state, establish a new residency, and get a new drivers license, why would you expect your previous license to still be valid?