55tyger,

You might consider fishing a different water for different fish. To be sure, you see a lot of discussion of the Little Lehigh Creek among beginners on this forum but that's mainly because that is where a large number of the forum community live and the stream is local to our beginner events. That doesn't necessarily mean it's a good place for beginners to learn on their own - LL is actually a rather challenging stream with wild trout and educated stockies that see flies all day. Even experienced FFers can get schooled on the LL.

Instead, why not check out some warm water opportunities? For the next 4-5 weeks panfish will be in the shallows in virtually every lake or pond. Find a nearby state park or lake with public access nearby and go for sunfish. They will grab just about any fly and the bigger ones fight better than trout. There's some great fishing nearby for beginners.....just gotta "think outside the trout box" as I like to say. 😊
